Tajikistan has identified Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) attraction as a critical component of its national development strategy, which could contribute to the achievement of several policy goals, including private sector growth, job creation, and economic diversification.

As the COVID-19 pandemic has increased competition for FDI, the role of investment promotion agencies (IPAs) is growing around the world.

English as a Scientific and Research Language Springer
The latest in Springer's "Medical English" series, aimed at health care professionals who need English for their work but do not speak English on a day-to-day basis. Although much of the information provided will be useful for scientists of all backgrounds and nationalities, the book is aimed especially at non-native English-speaking physicians and biomedical scientists. It offers clear advice on a variety of topics relevant to the successful preparation and delivery of scientific presentations. Alongside guidance on the actual preparation and delivery of talks, helpful information is provided on such potential difficulties as dealing with questions, chairing sessions, and use of appropriate English. The book will offer encouragement for those embarking on a career in international science as well as practical advice on how to deal with a wide range of situations that may develop in the context of an international congress.

Reaching Out to Latino Families of English Language Learners SBPD Publications

This volume identifies resources, models, and specific practices for improving teacher preparation for work with second language learners. It shows how faculty positioned themselves to learn from resources, experts, preservice teachers, their own practice, and each other. The teacher education professionals leverage their experience to offer theoretical and practical insights regarding how other faculty could develop their own knowledge, improve their courses, and understand their influence on the preservice teachers they serve. The book addresses challenges others are likely to experience while improving teacher preparation, including preservice teacher resistance, the challenge of adding to already-packed courses, the difficulty of recruiting and retaining busy faculty members, and the question of how to best frame the larger issues. The authors also address options for integrating the work of improving teacher preparation for linguistic diversity into a variety of different teacher education program designs. Finally, the book demonstrates a data-driven approach that makes this work consistent with many institutions' mandate to produce research and to collect evidence supporting accreditation.

This dissertation, "Web Reading: ESL Learners' Perceptions and Strategy Use" by Mui-ying, Cheung, 廖美英, was obtained from The University of Hong Kong (Pokfulam, Hong Kong) and is being sold pursuant to Creative Commons:

Abstract: ABSTRACT The present study investigates ESL learners' perceptions of reading on the English Web and how they read for information. A questionnaire survey was conducted to the Secondary One Chinese learners of English in a Hong Kong secondary school. Eight respondents with high and low English proficiencies were asked to complete four web-based reading tasks. Their reading behaviour was videotaped with their verbal reports; semi-structured interviews and stimulated recalls were conducted afterwards. Comparisons between the two proficiency groups were made on their perceptions of reading on the English Web and their strategy use when completing the reading tasks. Results from the questionnaire survey show that most ESL learners in the study did not visit the English Web regularly. The more proficient learners browsed the Web to get information for their English homework and for interests, whereas the less proficient ones played Internet games. Most liked reading web pages with more information and graphics, but some found the English language an obstacle in their searches. The findings from the reading tasks show that both proficiency groups used similar reading skills, such as using keyword search, activating hyperlinks, skimming and scanning, intensive reading, predicting from non-textual clues, and making use of graphic and multi-media elements. However, the more proficient learners were more effective and efficient in completing the reading tasks. They read more intensively, relied less on graphics, and attended more to meanings at the sentential and the textual levels. The less proficient learners skimmed and scanned more frequently, relied more on graphic tools, and decoded meanings mainly at the word level. Both groups found reading on the English Web useful to their ESL learning, but the less proficient learners were not confident of getting the target information because they found the English on the Web difficult. The findings were related to the major ESL and web-based reading theories for explanations.

It was suggested more web-based reading activities could be included in the English Curriculum to expose learners to a wider range of authentic materials, and to help them develop the regular habit of reading on the English Web. More importantly, teacher guidance should be given on the selection of suitable websites, the design of appropriate reading tasks, the teaching of basic and advanced searching and reading skills, and the strengthening of learner's English language ability in promoting web-based reading. iv DOI: 10.5353/th_b2774188

The African Union (AU) has committed to a vision of Africa that is integrated, prosperous and peaceful driven by its own citizens, a dynamic force in the global arena (Vision and Mission of the African Union, May 2004). This guide is an effort to take up the challenge of achieving this vision. It is a tool to assist activists to engage with AU policies and programmes. It describes the AU decision-making process and outlines the roles and responsibilities of the AU institutions. It also contains a sampling of the experiences of those non-governmental organisations (NGOs) that have interacted with the AU.

The present book is a collection of scholarly reflections on the theme of humanism from an integrational linguistic perspective. It studies humanist thought in relation to the philosophy of language and communication underpinning it and considers the question whether being a 'humanist' binds one to a particular view of language. The contributions to this volume explore whether integrational linguistics, being informed by a non-mainstream semiology and adopting a lay linguistic perspective, can provide better answers to contentious ontological and epistemological questions concerning the humanist project – questions having to do with the self, reason, authenticity, creativity, free agency, knowledge and human communication. The humanist perspectives adopted by the contributors to this volume are critical insofar as they start from semiological assumptions that challenge received notions within mainstream linguistics, such as the belief that languages are fixed-codes of some kind, that communication serves the purpose of thought transfer, and that languages are prerequisites for communication.

In this book, Jennifer Jenkins, one of the leading proponents of English as a Lingua Franca, explores current academic English language policy in higher education around the world. Universities around the world are increasingly presenting themselves as "international" but their English language policies do not necessarily reflect this, even as the diversity of their student bodies grows. While there have been a number of attempts to explore the implications of this diversity from a cultural perspective, little has been said from the linguistic point of view, and in particular, about the implications for what kind(s) of English are appropriate for English lingua franca communication in international higher education. Throughout the book Jenkins considers the policies of English language universities in terms of the language attitudes and ideologies of university management and staff globally, and of international students in a UK setting. The book concludes by considering the implications for current policies and practices, and what is needed in order for universities to bring themselves in line linguistically with the international status they claim. English as a Lingua Franca in the International University is an essential read for researchers and postgraduate students working in the areas of Global Englishes, English as a Lingua Franca and English for Academic Purposes.

Learn the Easy Way to Speak and Write Well. I found this book by accident while browsing through a now-defunct Los Angeles bookstore/cafe. It was the luckiest accident of my life. At that point I had been a professional writer for more than twenty years, but I rarely enjoyed my work, and I felt all of it was disposable in one way or another. At first, reading this book gave me an incredible, if unfamiliar, feeling of joy and self-confidence. Afterwards, I began to surprise the hell out of myself in terms of what I was able to accomplish. This little book is very practical and precise. The best plan is to follow the best authors and these masters of language will guide you safely along the way. There are chapters devoted to all the essential components to make writing interesting. Devlin delivers a concise book that allows you to start improving your speech and writing quickly. Every writer should have this book as a ready reference and guide.

Interpreting in the Community and Workplace Open Dissertation Press Politics Russia provides the most comprehensive, accessible and up-to-date introduction to all aspects of the political development of Russia in the post-communist era. Writing with the undergraduate student specifically in mind, Danks' fluent style and masterly grasp of complex material will make this an indispensable guide for many years to come. Divided into five sections, Politics Russia maps a clear path towards an understanding of Russia and its politics in the twenty first century. In Part One the emergence of contemporary Russia is put into context by a consideration of the end of the USSR and the move towards democratization under Gorbachev. Part Two provides a clear-sighted and stimulating overview of the nature of the executive and the legislature in contemporary Russia. Part Three examines civil society, the role of the media and the representative process. Part Four is focussed on the policy process, from foreign and defence policies to the development of domestic social policies from the provision of healthcare to education. Part Five, the final, provides an overall consideration the contemporary state of Russia, examining the development from Yeltsin, to Putin to Medvedev, and considers the possible futures of the region.
